

Atalaya Golf & Country Club, Estepona

The Atalaya Golf & Country Club well known as "The Golfer's Paradise" is tucked away in the remarkably quiet and scenic Andalucian countryside between San Pedro and Estepona. It is the headquarters of the Professional Golfers' Association and has two magnificent 18-hole courses. In addition there is a training area that consists of a spacious driving range, 6 short game areas and 3 putting greens.

At 6142m in length, this tree-lined, parkland type course sports wide fairways, fast elevated greens and several water hazards. There is no major undulation in the first part of the course but the second half winds slightly higher up into the foothills of the surrounding hills.

The old course is a classical parkland course formed by a series of superb fairways of Bermuda grass, strategically-placed bunkers and elevated greens. The 18 hole par 72 Old Course was originally designed by Bernard Von Limburger and opened in 1968.

The New Course according to the experts is a genuine test, as much for beginners as established players, and considerably more challenging than the Old Course. Deceptively straightforward to begin with around the flat fairways of the Old Course, it then winds up into more difficult hilly terrain before wandering down again to the lower levels. This 18 hole New Course was designed by Paul Krings and opened in 1992.

Atalaya has an attractive Andalusian style clubhouse which is the ideal place for rest and relaxation after a session on the greens. The bar boasts fabulous views of Marbella, the Mediterranean and even Gibraltar, there's also a restaurant that has a varied menu representing the very best of national and international cuisine.

In the Pro-Shop you will find all the latest equipment alongside shoes and clothing.
